Quick question

Who has applied for 10 or more jobs? 20 or more? How many replies did you get?

Why applications fail?

1. Overload: 50 to 150 applications per role
2. Trust: every resume claims "good communication"
3. Bias: name, school and suburb shape first impressions
4. The black hole: no reply, no feedback

What if employers came looking for you?

One profile, not fifty applications
Employers search for your verified skills
You choose which introductions to accept

The five assessments

- Numerical Reasoning (30 min)
- Communication, Comprehension and Spelling (30 min)
- Australian Workplace Culture (25 min)
- Ethics and Integrity (25 min)
- Artificial Intelligence (AI) Workplace Readiness (25–35 min, three tiers)

Who sees what, and when

Browsing: display name, scores, suburb, availability, interests

After you accept an introduction: work history, school, video, messaging

Only with a job offer: full name, phone, email, resume

Never: street address, social media, family details

Your journey

1. Register free
2. Sit your assessments
3. Choose your display name and build your profile
4. Get discovered
5. Accept the introductions you want
6. Interview and get hired

Make your profile work

Record a 60-second video — no full name or contact details

Be specific about the work you want

Reply to introductions within 24–48 hours

Keep it up to date

Stay Safe

Research companies before accepting

Interviews at a workplace, in public or online — tell someone

Never pay money or share bank details before a written contract

Red flags: offers without interviews, pressure to decide now

Under 18? You are protected

A parent or guardian must consent before employers can see you
Employers can contact you only through the platform
Your parent can attend interviews and is told about any offer

Your questions

Is it free? Registering is free; you pay only for the assessments you choose

Is my information safe? Employers see your display name, not your full name

Do I have to be 18? No — under 18s join with a parent's consent

What if I don't do well? You can retake an assessment after six months
