Who sees what, and when

When	What an employer sees
Browsing	A display name (such as "Sam T", or a nickname you choose), verified scores, suburb, availability, interests, education level and certifications. Never a full name, school or contact details.
After you accept an introduction	Also work history, school and education details, certifications and video, and messaging through the platform — still under the display name.
Only with a job offer	Full name, phone number, email address and resume.

When	What an employer sees
Never	Street address, personal social media or family information.

If you turn on anonymous mode, employers see a candidate number instead of your display name until you accept an introduction.

Make your profile work

- Choose your display name — your first name and surname initial, or a nickname.
- Record a 60-second video on your phone, but do not say your full name or contact details in it.
- Be specific about the work you want, and keep your availability up to date.
- Reply to introduction requests within 24 to 48 hours.

Stay safe

- Research every employer before accepting an introduction.

- Never pay money or share bank details before you have a written contract.
- Report anything that worries you to enquiry@exemplarpa.com.au.
